TRIPLE HELIX

Mexico is a prime example of how strategic collaboration can drive progress and economic growth in the manufacturing sector.

GOVERNMENT

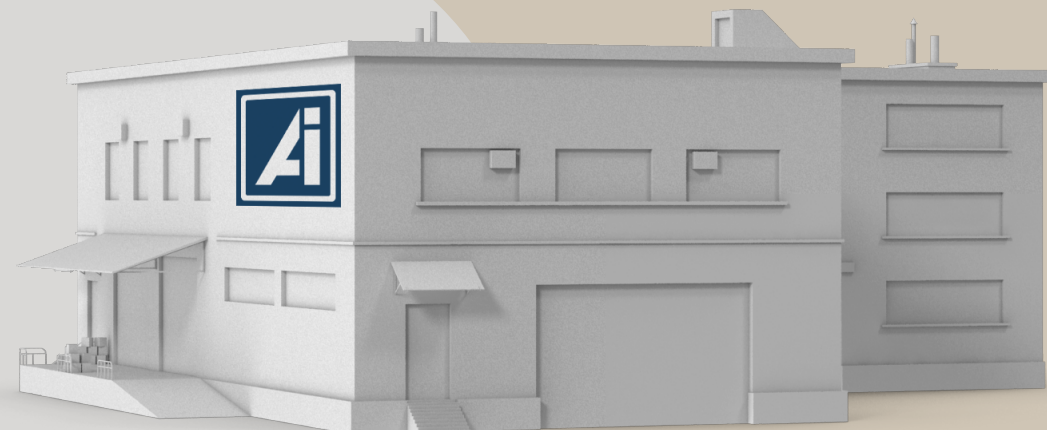

The government creates policies and supports educational programs tailored to industry needs, along with incentives to encourage specialized training programs, ensuring a highly capable workforce within the economically active population in Mexico.

ACADEMY

Universities focus on research and education, providing the essential skills and knowledge required through programs tailored to industry needs.

INDUSTRY

Companies work with universities to identify skill gaps and develop relevant training programs, actively shaping educational programs to ensure graduates are job-ready and meet the specific needs of manufacturing companies in Mexico.

By fostering synergy between the government, industry, and academia, this model helps align educational programs with industry needs, supports the adoption of new technologies, and creates robust business ecosystems.
